

Float and Flow

Joan and Jim own a new boat. Will the boat float? They will see.

Jim and Joan have some toast and a bowl of oats before they load the boat.

They tow the boat to the Toad Lake. It is a slow drive down the road, but at last Joan sees the yellow arrow to show them where to go.

"Turn left at the oak," Joan says. "Follow the arrow."

Just when the boat is in the lake and ready to go, Jim lets out a big groan. "I have left my coat at home. What if the wind starts to blow?"

"You can borrow mine. At least it won't snow," says Joan.

As they began to row the boat, Joan asks, "Did you bring the rest of the loaf of bread to throw to the crows?"

"No," says Jim. "I left it at home with my coat."

Then, Joan sees the water flow into the boat. "Oh no! This lake is too shallow! Throw me the rope and let's pull the boat out."

On the way home, Jim says, "I know we are going to have a better day tomorrow!"
